| 1 | As a caregiver that is. Perhaps a bit uneasy talking to a person that I do not know if they are the person with the dementia or the caregiver.Its hard often to tell whom is the caregiver or whom is the person cared for and of course unaware what their comfort level is in sharing.  | 10/24/2025 6:57 PM |
| 2 | It depends. I have a friend on this journey, and she wouldn't want to talk much about it, but she doesn't want to talk about physical issues either. She's a good friend but not what I think you mean about by a close friend. We see each other once a week and I give her rides places because she can't drive any more. Perhaps because she is so private I don't think of her as a "close" friend. | 10/24/2025 8:19 AM |
| 3 | It depends on with whom I'm talking. My mother had Alzheimer's so I'm naturally concerned when I am forgetful but I don't want someone to assume I have dementia...yet  | 10/23/2025 3:46 PM |
| 4 | Easy to talk about with others and more complex with my own parents as it hits home.  | 10/23/2025 2:42 PM |

|---|---|---------------------|
| 1 | Excellent   | 10/29/2025 1:54 PM  |
| 2 | Tim and Amanda were both excellent in portraying the subtle changes as the dementia journey went on. The reversal of roles at the end, how the disease affects not only the one who has the disease but the partner as well, and a forecast of some of the problems that lay ahead on this road.    | 10/24/2025 11:12 PM |
| 3 | It was a wonderful presentation in many ways. Liked the time lapse approach to show the subtle progression on not only the disease but the personal relationship challenges one faces on that journey. The denial, the frustrations, many obstacles to handling life and relationships etc!         | 10/24/2025 6:57 PM  |
| 4 | I liked the response to one comment: "this is fiction"----or something like that. It is light fiction that did not depict the more complex, the tragic, side of dementia and the relationship between two loving partners. Perhaps the time restriction made that more nuanced approach impossible. | 10/24/2025 5:57 AM  |
| 5 | Initially we could all identify with the usual spousal driving "discussions"! . It did take Amanda a few lapses in Tim 's memory to accept the notion that an intervention was needed. Their use  | 10/23/2025 6:47 PM  |

of humor helped to diffuse negative feelings.

| 5  | How lucky we are in this neck of the woods that has so many resources.   | 10/24/2025 11:12 PM |
| 6  | I thought the play was outstanding and the questions were open so we had a good discussion. We didn't follow the model of going around the circle; we just all pitched in our thoughts! I think everyone had a fair amount of time.  | 10/24/2025 8:19 AM  |
| 7  | the conversation after the performance   | 10/24/2025 5:57 AM  |
| 8  | The value of humor! I think Amanda was brave in how she took action in support of Tim's memory issues. Tim also had his strong points with his ability to see humor in events and willingness to talk about how he could not find the golf course. I think their relationship was very healthy to begin with and helped make things go a bit smoother! | 10/23/2025 6:47 PM  |
| 9  | The experiences of others. It seemed everyone there had been touched by Alzheimer's.   | 10/23/2025 3:46 PM  |
| 10 | Just that working in the industry gives me a deeper understanding of what one could face however it is not any easier to have the difficult conversations with those who are experiencing memory loss and next steps necessary.  | 10/23/2025 2:42 PM  |

| 7  | Would LOVE to see the other 3. A dream would be to see these very important plays shown on national TV as unless one is "living it" or sees a program about a celebrity they know with it, most people are totally clueless and really have not idea what the person nor the spouse/family are dealing with! | 10/24/2025 6:57 PM  |
| 8  | The one suggestion I'd make would be to trim down the introductory material. While the speaker was lovely, it did seem to go on too long. Maybe move some of the material to the close? We weren't invested in the program at the beginning.   | 10/24/2025 8:19 AM  |
